COURSE DETAILS

General Description and Objectives:

This course is designed for students who want to have a basic command of Chinese language and culture. Course objectives are for the student to build a solid foundation and to develop their four languages skills: speaking, writing, listening, and reading. The emphasis is on correct pronunciation, accurate tones and mastery of basic grammatical structures. The relationship between language and culture and the sociolinguistically appropriate use of language will be stressed throughout.

Learning Outcomes:

- Distinguish the tones and sounds of Chinese, pronounce individual sounds and tones according to the Pinyin system of modern standard Chinese, write down dictated syllables with correct tones as required;
- Comprehend general information and vocabulary when the communication partner uses objects, gestures, and visuals in speaking or writing;
- Comprehend the message or conversation using contextual clues, key words redundancy, paraphrase or restate-ment; and
- Perform basic communicative functions in face-to-face social interactions using a string of short sentences.

Admission Requirement:

- Combine and recombine learned materials in personal meaningful communication;
- Locate Chinese language information on familiar topics (e.g. daily life, hobbies, sports, travel and so on);
- Continue to gain concrete knowledge of Chinese customs and manners;
- Use more complex grammatical constructions and more complex sentence structures; and
- Produce a string of sentences and short passage-level language.

Admission Requirement:

- Minimum 300 commonly used words;
- Master adverbial expressions of time and place;
- Master commonly used complex predicate sentences;
- Master commonly used special sentence patterns;
- Master basic expressions for tenses and aspects;
- Master the meanings and usages of commonly used notional words and function words; and
- Master commonly used complex sentences.

COURSE DETAILS

General Description and Objectives:

This course is designed for students who have completed Intermediate II Chinese or the equivalent. While many of the linguistic tasks students learn to handle are similar to those of Intermediate Chinese, the level of language required to carry out these tasks is more advanced. It aims to help students to build up a more comprehensive understanding of the fundamental grammar of the language, and expand their knowledge of its core vocabulary and commonly used phrases. Students will carry on conversations and participate in classroom discussions in Mandarin Chinese on various topics associated with daily life. Mandarin Putonghua and simplified characters are the medium of instruction in this course.

Learning Outcomes:

- Handle a variety of communication tasks;
- Demonstrate the ability to reason and present sound argument in both oral and written discourse at the advanced level;
- Acquire knowledge relating to Chinese culture and traditions;
- Understand the nature of language, its function, structure, and interactional (social) purposes; and
- Produce passage-level language.

Admission Requirement:

- Minimum 1000 commonly used words;
- Master complements;
- Master basic rhetorical questions;
- Master the meanings and usages of complex used notional words and function words; and
- Master complex sentences.
